

STRIKEFORCE SELECTS BLANK ROME GOVERNMENT RELATIONS AS WASHINGTON, DC PARTNER

StrikeForce Technologies, Inc. has selected Blank Rome Government Relations to represent its interests in Washington, D.C. StrikeForce Technologies is the creator of ProtectID, a suite of security software products that authenticates a person's identification using two separate pathways – one that speaks to the server via a traditional route, and another that travels “out-of-band” using a telephone or cell phone. ProtectID can also add up to nine layers of security, including biometrics such as voice recognition, iris or fingerprint scanning.

On behalf of StrikeForce Technologies, Blank Rome Government Relations will develop strategic initiatives to raise StrikeForce's profile in Washington and identify business opportunities.

“Given that our country's most critical issue is security, we believe StrikeForce has a vital technology that will be of great interest to those who do business with our government, especially in the areas of homeland security and defense,” said Mark Kay, Chief Executive Officer of StrikeForce. “We are pleased to work with a firm of Blank Rome's caliber that can help us maximize our resources in Washington.”

About StrikeForce Technologies

Based in Edison, NJ, StrikeForce Technologies, Inc. is the creator of ProtectID, a revolutionary authentication approach that strengthens online security by eliminating the paired transmission of usernames with credentials over vulnerable networked pathways. ProtectID creates an "out-of-band" pathway for authenticating users' credentials that is away from the client network and out of the reach of hackers and Identity thieves. Log in information and passwords are carried separately. Upon submission of user information, an additional information layer is required for verification. Though this verification may be by phone or an SSL Agent, the ProtectID system can add up to nine layers of security, including biometrics such as voice recognition, iris or fingerprint scanning.
